READERPEN™

AWARD-WINNING SUPPORT

Inspire reading independence with this text-to-speech assistive technology and make curriculum available to all students!

“We are very happy to be able to offer our student the ReaderPen™. We have found much success with the devices helping our students to access text, which has impacted every other area of their academic development. The pens have been a helpful tool for a wide range of users, from those with reading and learning difficulties (particularly dyslexia) to general students. Our students who have received the ReaderPen™ are feeling better about reading which is translating into better academic outcomes.” – Mississippi Jefferson County School District, Director of Special Services/504 Coordinator

The ReaderPen™ reads scanned text aloud so learners can take control of their own literacy development. This portable device is a great alternative to a human reader, ideal for complying with social distancing requirements.

“We recently evaluated a student with a complex learning profile resulting in the student having difficulty processing symbols and phonetic codes at the rate necessary for fluent reading. The ReaderPen™ provided a means to access grade-level reading material which the student could comprehend but was previously unable to access. Additionally, the ReaderPen™ is small and does not draw adverse attention to it. Previous text-to-speech trials went unused as the student feared the social stigma. The student’s family was worried about the transition from school to adulthood but now feel encouraged that their child will have a way to access material needed to pursue a chosen career.” - California Department of Education - Diagnostic Center of Southern CA, SLP & Certified Brain Injury Specialist

“When our student was helped with reading, he was ashamed that he couldn’t read and everyone knew. Even though we thought he was getting the information from the aide, his embarrassment kept him from learning. The ReaderPen™ gave him independence and boosted his confidence. Now, he can do it himself and knows the answer.” - Teacher
